By susan Anne smith
I have used this book previously in my university studies. I am delighted to now find it is available in vocational education and training. I have found the last chapter to be a wonderful overview and helpful in my current training and for a conference presentation.

By Catharine A. Andre
I have long been borrowing and then re-borrowing this text from the library - and finally realised that this was one of those 'must have' references when working in this field. This is a scholarly yet pragmatic text, and I use it regularly and would recommend it for any professional library. Kate Andre Project Leader at the University of South Australia

Work now invariably requires a continual focus on learning: to improve productivity, to enhance the flexibility of employees and to develop and transform organizations. This volume brings together leading experts from the United States, Britain, Australia and New Zealand to critically evaluate the current debates on workplace learning and to propose directions for future developments in both research and practice. Topics covered include: * expectations of learning at work into the twenty-first century * learning theories, practice and performance implications * the relationship between workplace learning and other forms of lifelong learning * the international developments in competency-based approaches to learning and assessment * the influence of language, power, culture and gender upon the 'construction' of learning. Topical and informative, this volume will be an invaluable resource for students and researchers of training, HRD, continuing and adult education.
